Gerhard Richter is an enthusiastic photographer who frequently transforms photographs of landscapes into popular editions. The offset print on cardboard "Seascape I" is based on montages of several photographs of seascapes that the artist captured in 1969.

For Richter, even the selection of the photograph is a step towards the artwork: "I try to find nothing tangible. It's a kind of escape."

This work stands out not only for its richness of contrast but also because it appears enveloped in a sfumato - a kind of misty haze. In this way, it exudes a unique, mystical aura that captivates the viewer.
