In 2007, as part of the Backjumps exhibition, Victor Ash painted the now iconic mural "Astronaut Cosmonaut" on a building facade in the Kreuzberg district of Berlin, directly beside the route of underground line 1, at Kottbusser Tor. The motif depicts a floating astronaut and covers an area of 22 x 14 metres. He painted the motif with black paint, with some of the paint running down the wall.

Ash uses the spaceman as a symbol of the Cold War and the race into space between the former Soviet Union and the United States. In this way, he establishes a connection between the artwork and the Berlin Wall that used to run near it. That is also what the name of the artwork, "Astronaut Cosmonaut", refers to. The term "astronaut" became NASA's official designation for a space traveller in 1958, whereas Soviet space programmes used the "cosmonaut". The mural quickly became a Kreuzberg attraction and is now an integral part of the district's cityscape.

The mural inspired singer Mark Owen to create his video for the song "Stars", in which Owen runs through Berlin as an astronaut.

The edition offered here was created in an exclusive collaboration with Kunsthaus ARTES. Each copy is printed with mother-of-pearl pigments on especially heavy handmade paper.
